	Famed Burgundy producer Jean-Marc Roulot is a Chardonnay maestro. In fact, his wines are not only highly allocated—we get a total of 6 bottles a year—they are considered some of the best on the planet. When I heard JMR & Bodegas Chacra joined forces to showcase Chard from Patagonia, I was intrigued. At a fraction of the cost for any JMR wine, this is the best next thing: texturally crunchy, full of energy and brightness, this Chardonnay will seduce with its elegance and purity. Besides, when was the last time you popped a cork from Patagonia?

ARIZONA Arizona has three major wine growing regions: Willcox, Sonoita, and the Verde Valley. What makes it possible is high-desert elevation and sandy loam soils. As of today, we have over one hundred federally licensed and bonded wineries. Spanish and Italian varietals bode well. Look for Kent Callaghan's Lisa's Blend or Todd and Kelly's White blend for initiation. Wines from AZ cast a flavor spell more redolent of the old world. Read more on the rosé & red wine sections about AZ.

"Isn't it too hot here?" or "don't you all have issues with water?" are some questions we get tableside. Truth is, the opposite is what poses some challenges in growing wine in AZ. The three major wine growing regions have high elevation as the common thread and the reason we can grow grapes here. These wine regions do have a propensity for late spring frost, which pose a risk if the vineyard is showing signs of bud break. Also, Arizona enjoys dramatic monsoons which coincide with harvest. Precipitation is the last thing you want during harvest time because it leads to rot, powdery mildew and other pesky creatures that thrive in humid environments.

Named after the tour de force justice Sandra Day O'Connor—first woman to serve on the supreme court. Though she was born in El Paso, Texas...she grew up in a large family ranch near Duncan, Arizona. She was elected as a Republican to the Arizona Senate, rising to a position of majority leader—also first woman to occupy such a position. Described by Reagan as "a person for all seasons," O'Connor was confirmed unanimously by the senate and sworn in as the first female justice on September 25th, 1981.

Inside the bottle, a blend of Montepulciano and Petit Verdot with a touch of new oak. This Rosé has gravitas and presence + serious thirst-quenching acidity. Needless to say, it's a Rosé for "all seasons," and a small gesture to give this amazing woman a 'tip of the hat.'

	Its founder, Sergio Manetti, refusing to include Trebbiano in the blend back in 1981, was not allowed to use the 'Chianti Classico' denomination. He was obliged to simply carry the 'Rosso di Toscana' delineation—didn't matter considering the resulting wine, well, became iconic. Since Sergio passed, his son Martino alongside Paolo Salvi (the estate's oenologue) and Bruno Bini (the cellar master) continue to carry the torch of excellence rendering this Sangio: Last Supper Wine.

Lopez de Heredia is widely considered as benchmark for the Rioja. They've been around since 1877 (over 140 years); safe to assume, they know what they're doing. Furthermore, they normally release their wines with a little more age than most other bodegas, giving you an opportunity to enjoy wine with some age and finesse. At this price point, it's worth the price of admission for every ounce.

'It was my first trip to Arizona's vineyards in almost five years and the leap forward both in quality and stylistic diversity was considerable. The red wines from producers like Dos Cabezas Wine Works, Caduceus Cellars, Callaghan Vineyards, Château Tumbleweed, Los Milics, Rune and Sand Reckoner Vineyards (in the latter case also the whites) now taste fresher, better balanced and more polished than almost anything that I tasted last time I was there. However, the most important change is the way they also taste way more striking than they were before. The best of them have strikingly original personalities that say, "I AM WHAT I AM and only this place, these people and this season could have made me that way!" This is the result of vision, a steep learning curve and the uncompromising determination of these winemakers.'

	"Pavle: What were some surprising take-aways after tasting AZ wine? Patrick Comiskey: First it's that the quality, even in the five years since TAPAS, has improved dramatically, in all areas, from hygiene to oak treatment and tannin management. The second is that the winemakers are no longer interested in chasing trends but in mapping out their own, in embracing varieties that are well-suited to Arizona terroir instead of parroting styles and bottlings from other regions, notably California. Third, that singular pursuit has led to some distinct terroir character in the wines."

WHAT'S WITH ALL THE OPUS?

I spent a little over three years in working in Napa Valley. To say they were formative, it's a severe understatement. That's where I was lucky enough to rub elbows with one of the most professional, kind, hardworking restaurant owners—Bettina Rouas of Angèle Restaurant and Bar. Her place is where all the local winemakers come to eat and celebrate life. A visit to Napa without visiting her institution, feels lackluster. In other words, if you like great food, great people, and an inviting room, Angèle is a no brainer.

Michael Silacci (executive winemaker at Opus One) was one of many, who made me feel welcome to Napa. At the time I couldn't afford these iconic wines, but it didn't matter because Michael is not only is generous of spirit, he made sure my family and I were treated like royalty at the winery—we got to try so many vintages. An experience I will never forget. There's a story that's too long to tell about Mike and how he sent me off to Arizona (he broke the law in the process) that's too long to write here. Next time you see me, ask me about it.

Oh, the wines! Historic, Iconic.

The result of two powerhouses in the wine world amalgamating their vision of Napa's potential. The brainchild of Napa Valley Vintner Robert Mondavi and Baron Philippe de Rothschild of Chateau Mouton Rothschild in Bordeaux.
